Bellringer: Researching about Science

Warm-up questions:

1. Look through some of ExploreLearning's science Gizmos™. Pick out one on a science topic that is of particular interest to you. Which Gizmo did you select and why?

2. Spend a few minutes exploring the Gizmo. Now, write down one question you have about this particular subject.

Finding Answers

Many questions you have about science can be answered by doing a little bit of research. Good sources of scientific information include library books, science textbooks, newspaper articles, journal articles, and Web sites.

Using a library's online catalog, look up sources that could be used to try to find the answer to the question you wrote above. Use the sources to complete the table below.
